STORY TIME: THROWING AWAY

Robin appeared at the window, looking upset. "There are pieces of train all over the garden," she cheeped. "What should we do about it?" "Train?" replied Big Teddy, astonished; "What train?" "Little Teddy's train came to bits," whiffled Rabbit. "So, I threw it away," explained Little Teddy. Big Teddy was not often cross. "Do you mean to tell me that your lovely Christmas train is out in the garden because it came apart?" Little Teddy nodded unhappily. "It's supposed to come to bits," snapped Big Teddy, "and even if it didn't, we don't throw our toys all over the garden. That's really naughty!" Little Teddy burst into tears. "I didn't know," he wailed. "I'm so sorry." Big Teddy led the way outside and the toys worked hard to pick up the pieces and put the train together. Lamb held Little Teddy's paw and even Kitten helped. "Can I have Little Teddy's train?" asked Little Chick. "I could pull it round the garden really fast, and give everyone a ride," suggested Puppy. "I could be the driver," quacked Duckling. Little Teddy cried some more. "Cheer up, Little Teddy, no-one's going to take your present away," said Big Teddy, "and I'm sorry I was cross. I thought you knew about litter." "Who is litter?" asked Kitten. "Is that a new friend?" "Litter means throwing things away instead of mending them or giving them away to our friends," explained Big Teddy, mopping Little Teddy's tears. "Perhaps we could just all share my train," he replied. "And play Sleeping Bunnies!" barked Puppy, joyfully.
